

Investment Objective

Velle Capital ETI provides exposure to the performance of the Velle Capital Portfolio Linked Note (the "Underlying Asset"). The strategy aims to generate returns through investments in credit positions and other opportunities linked to real estate assets, mainly located in Spain.

The portfolio focuses on acquiring positions related to distressed or non-performing credit exposures, including non-performing loans (NPLs) secured by real estate assets, real estate owned assets (REOs), auction-related positions and other investments acquired through judicial or auction proceedings, provided that they are supported by an underlying real estate asset.

Returns are expected to be generated through the recovery and subsequent monetisation of acquired positions. Depending on the characteristics of each investment, value creation may arise from debt collections, payment agreements, restructurings, settlements, enforcement proceedings, acquisition and disposal of real estate assets, or the sale of credit positions to third parties.

Each investment opportunity is analysed individually, considering factors such as the acquisition price, estimated value of the underlying real estate assets, expected recovery period, associated costs, risk profile and expected return.

ETI Securities entail specific risks that potential investors should thoroughly understand prior to making an investment decision.

Securities issued by the Issuer represent products that involve a substantial degree of risk and may not be suitable for all investors. The price of these securities may rise or fall, and investors may not recover the full amount of their initial investment. Securities are denominated in US Dollars, Euros, or Pounds, and the value of investments in other currencies may be impacted by exchange rate fluctuations.

Investors should be aware that ETI Securities are not principal-protected, meaning that a total loss of capital is possible if the underlying asset decreases significantly in value. It is essential to conduct independent research and analysis to understand the nature and extent of the investment risks.

Furthermore, prospective investors should consider their financial circumstances, risk tolerance, and investment objectives before making any investment decisions. For more detailed information regarding the risks associated with ETI Securities, please refer to the "Risk Factors" section in the relevant prospectus.
